ON THE TOWN

THE NEW BROADWAY SEASON SPRINGS TO LIFE ON A MUSICAL NOTE

Fun-filled 'La Cage' lives up to its fanfare

YES, IT is. It really is. La Cage aux Folles is a musical sufficient in itself to make you forget any French movie of a similar name. It opened at the Palace Theater last night, it has music and lyrics by Jerry Herman and a book by Harvey Fierstein, a knock-out performance by George Hearn, and it is totally everything — all almost to tally everything — you have ever heard about it.

A few shows — and La Cage aux Folles positively floats amid that happy few — arrive on Broadway with such a fanfare of advance welcome that they almost challenge disbelief. You say: "Show me!" La Cage aux Folles shows you.

Just 10 years ago Jean Poiret wrote the original play, and later it became a highly original film. It portrayed homosexuality as a legitimate life-style. It was a play — and then a film — simply about love.

That is part of the reason why La Cage is so moving. Fierstein — a sometime drag queen himself — has somewhat deepened the original Poiret, chiefly by making it a story about personal acceptance and human dignity.

But that is not the only cause for La Cage to be a hit. Underpinning and, at times, overriding the story, or even more the theme, are Jerry Herman's music and lyrics. This is his best musical yet — happier, more assertive, more buoyant than Hello Dolly! or Mame.

And with that kind of music. That kind of breezy, swiny Broadway music that you thought had, at least briefly, disappeared from style.

Georges and Albin — a different kind of love affair. Georges (Gene Barry) runs a transvestite nightclub. Albin (George Hearn) is his star of the show, a drag queen of the highest drag, and a vedette to shine your stars out.

Georges — almost accidentally — many years ago sired a son, Jean-Michel, and together with Albin has brought him up. Now Jean-Michel has fallen in love and wants to get married.

The girl's parents are as straight as the shortest distance between two points, and the boy is concerned that his own unconventional parents will scarcely be acceptable. And for the "parents" themselves, Georges and Albin, it is, to say the least, a time for recognition.

Love conquers all. In musicals it always does.

This is Fierstein's contribution. And it works like a song — particularly with Herman's songs to back it up. Yes, there are times when the show becomes too contrived, even too apologetic for its homosexuality.

The son emerges totally unsympathetic, and you wonder why Hearn's character of the mother has to be taught to be macho. But I don't know too much about drag queens. Happily, I always respect plays about love.

Herman's different contribution — this is basic — is to give music with heart and to realize the Parisian concept of revue.

So the music works on two levels. We have, for example, Hearn singing with a raw passion, I Am What I Am, as the first-act finale.

But we also have showbiz numbers such as the title-song, which is gorgeous Lido-style music, with rather tighter imagination.

And there is also that dangerous transvestite element that — if you wish — you can certainly imagine you are ignoring. Two — I think it was two — of the chorus line are really women. Make a gender check. Pick them out.

I have always admired Hearn and I always knew that sooner or later he would be a Broadway star — not just a star, but one of those megastars. I just did not expect he would have to wear a skirt to make it.

But he wears it superbly and he belts out like a baritone of Merman — he is not a great voice but he is a convincing voice. He happens.

He holds the stage.

Gene Barry — in a touchingly honest performance — does wonders in the much more difficult and less flashy part of Georges. He has a delicacy that works beautifully.

Working beautifully is, indeed, what La Cage is all about. It is a rare mixture of elegance and gusto — and, fundamentally, this is the contribution, perhaps the gift, of Arthur Laurents.

He has directed the show with a sure-footed energy and, clearly, an honest concern. There is here the delicacy that is needed. Laurents provides it — and, for example, it lets Hearn waltz to glory.

The choreography by Scott Salmon — a man I never even heard of — provides very sensible and sensitive Parisian show routines, and the design team of David Mitchell, with his superbly eloquent settings, Theoni Aldredge, a century or so of costumes, and Jules Fisher, a flashy flash-load of light, provide the show with its special fashion.

But at the end, it is really Hearn sliding, riding, simply enjoying Herman's music. And it is Hearn showing, with enormous pace, the only purpose of sexuality is the hope and the continuation of love.

La Cage aux Folles. Yes. Terrific. They even told you that in Boston. For me, personally, I think what I love best was the tenderness of a story combined with the brashness of its music.

But you can, I am sure, find something for yourselves to love in it. If art is a mirror up to nature, then this is art, this is a mirror and this is nature.
